In his book On the Things That Are Not Caesar, David Bentley Hart argues that Christianity is not a political ideology, but rather a way of life that is incompatible with the pursuit of power. He calls on Christians to reject the temptation to use their faith to justify violence or oppression, and to instead focus on living out the teachings of Jesus Christ.

Hart's book is a timely and important contribution to the ongoing debate about the relationship between religion and politics. In a world where religious violence is all too common, it is more important than ever to understand the true nature of Christianity and its implications for our political lives.

Hart begins his book by exploring the historical relationship between Christianity and politics. He argues that, from the very beginning, Christianity has been a religion that is suspicious of power. Jesus Christ himself was a political outsider who rejected the temptations of wealth and power. He taught his followers to love their enemies and to pray for those who persecute them.

Hart argues that the early Christians understood that Christianity is not about acquiring power in this world, but about living out the kingdom of God. The kingdom of God is a realm of peace, justice, and love that is not of this world. It is a kingdom that is coming, but has not yet fully arrived.

Hart's book is a challenging and provocative read, but it is also a deeply hopeful one. He reminds us that Christianity is not about power, but about love. It is about following Jesus Christ, who came to serve, not to be served.

In a world that is often dark and violent, On the Things That Are Not Caesar is a beacon of hope. It is a book that calls us to reject the temptation to use our faith to justify violence or oppression, and to instead focus on living out the teachings of Jesus Christ.
