With a lyrical voice that dances between the concrete and the ethereal, Halebsky explores the intricate workings of memory, its fragility and its enduring power. She questions the reliability of our recollections, recognizing that our memories are not simply static records of the past but rather fluid, malleable entities that shape and reshape themselves over time.

“Memory is a fickle thing. It can be as delicate as a butterfly's wing, easily torn or brushed away. Or it can be as resilient as a diamond, enduring the passage of time and the weight of adversity.”

String of Paper Suns is more than a mere chronicle of events; it is a profound meditation on the nature of time, loss, and the bittersweet beauty of human existence. Halebsky weaves together fragments of her past with reflections on the present and musings on the future, creating a rich and multilayered narrative that resonates with universal themes.
